LONDON, June 8 .- A dispatch to the Daily News from Vienna says that reports from obersdorf make it evident that one hundred persons are missing at that place as a result of the floods. Eighteen dead bodies have been recovered. A dispatch to the Standard from Vienna gives additional particulars of the flooding of Koberdsdorf, the Hungarian summer resort in the mountains. So sudden was the rise of the freshet that it was not realized until the bodies of the dead peasantry, pieces of buildings and furniture from the cottages came floating into the lower part of the town. One of the remarkable incidents of the flood was related by some of the persons who escaped to the mountains. It was the story of the manner in which a cradle containing a sleeping child was forced down the gorges by the rushing waters. The child was rescued with difficulty by those in the lower part of the village. Owing to the damage to the wires, the telegraph lines being broken in many directions, it is impossible to ascer-tain the exact loss of life, but it is feared that the whole town has been destroyed. It is, however, known that twelve bodies

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. PORTLAND, Ind., June 7.-In March, 1889, the first oil in Indiana was discovered on the Penn farm, two miles west of this city, by H. O. His first wells tory. were light, and he met with many discouragements, but, having great confidence that Jay county had a rich oil field, he was persevering, and finally, in September, 1892, in Penn township, that started off at five hundred barrels a day. ## FISHING SUPERSTITIONS. Among Many Curious Tales Is One

Fishermen have queer customs. A few years ago the fishermen of Preston, Lancashire, used actually to go fishing on Sun-day. It seems incredible, but they did. A clergyman of the town used to preach against this Sabbath desecration, and pray that they might catch no fish. And they did not. But they found out how to make his prayers of no avail. The fishermen used to make a little effigy of the parson in rags, and put this small "guy" up their chimneys. While his reverence was slowly smoked and consumed the fish bit-like anv-The fishermen of the Isle of Man always feel safe from storm and disaster they have a dead wren board. They have a tradition at one time an evil spirit evil spirit ways haunted the herring pack and was always attended by storms. The spirit assumed many forms; at last it took the shape of a wren and flew away. If the fishermen have a dead wren with them they are certain that all will be safe and snug. Shocking it is to be compelled to state that many fishing superstitions are ungailantly directed against the ladies. Over against Ross there is the Island of Lewis, sixty miles in length. In this isle there is but one fresh river. "Fish abound there in very great plenty," but only let a woman wade in the stream, and not a salmon will be seen there for at least twelve months. There is a song about "Eliza's Tootsies." that immortal lyric does not explain why they should frighten the fish. I believe the ladies deny the allegation in toto. In the south of Ireland an angler proceeding to fish declares that he will have no luck if he is asked where he is going to, if he sees a magpie, or "if he is so unfortunate as to meet a woman."

HETTY GREEN'S INHERITANCE. Mr. Barling Accounts for the Money

He Has in Trust for Her. New York Mail and Express The answer of Henry A. Barling, the sole surviving executor of the estate of Edward Mott Robinson, to the petition of Mrs. Hetty Green for his removal from that position was filed this morning in the Surrogate's office. The estate is worth nearly $6,000,000.

and was bequeathed to Mrs. Green, the daughter of Robinson. The present action was begun before th Surrogate to remove Barling, on the ground that he had misapplied the funds of the estate and had not paid her large sums, which Va., before Chief Justice Fuller, she claimed were due to her as income and Hughes.

Barling, in his answer, denies that he has misapplied any of the funds of the estate, and claims that all such sums remain on hand subject to settlement of the court. The whole litigation arises over the dispute whether certain sums of money accrung to the estate are income, or whether they should be invested as capital. Barling leges that there is no foundation for the belief expressed by Mrs. Green that upon the settlement of the accounts large sums will be found due her. He claims that upon duced in the Illinois Legislature in the the adjudication of the settlement of the accounts there will be found due her a sum of $500,000, besides a sum exceeding $100,000 interest, which sums are now on deposit in the United States Trust Company. New York Tribune The Impecunious Young Man had been kept in the house by a cold, so he had actually managed to get together $10 on which there was no pressing claim. Of course, he had debts, but nothing extremely "I ought to do something for that friend of my sister who is in town," he mused, "I haven't taken any notice of the card she sent. I wonder how I can square myself? Might take her to the theater. No, that won't do. I shall have to take her aunt. and that will be $4.50 or $6 for tickets. I shouldn't have enough for supper. Better make it a dinner. I can make the hour ? o'clock, and say that we couldn't get to the theater without hurrying through dinner, Besides, I can tell her I want to have a nice chat with her. We might even wind up a the art exhibition, if we went to a tabia d'hote. Tickets are only 50 cents.' So the note explaining how illness have prevented an earlier call, and closing with an invitation to dinner for the visitor and her aunt, was sent. The reply accepted the apology and the explanation. The young man had much difficulty in holding to his $10. He vowed that he would have asbestos pockets in his next suit of clothes, so that money couldn't burn a hole through. On the appointed evening the three went to the new hotel which the young man had seected, because he had been told that the dinner on the American plan was extremely good and cost only $1.50. This would leave a margin for wine, tip, car fare and art exhibition: The dinner was exceedingly pleasant, and two hours and a half were spent in delightful conversation. Finally coffee was served and drunk and the waiter brought two checks. One was for wine, the other for the dinner. The young man had been in some tight pinches before owing to his impecuniosity, but he was fairly overwhelmed when he saw the second check. Each dish that the party hod eaten was stamped on it in red ink, with the price. The horrible list ran down the entire face of the check and two-thirds of the way down the other side. It started: "Clams, 75 cents; soup, $1.20; pompano, $1.80," and went on enumerating every vegetable, meat, dessert and so on. The total must have been $15. The host pretended to study the check, but he was thinking of a way to get out of his scrape. He didn't have his watch, but the cashier might accept his card. Meantime the waiter stood solemnly by. "What's the total," finally asked the young man after a delay that must have aroused his guests' curiosity. "There it is," and the waiter pointed at some small figures at the top of the check. These said simply, "Three dinners, $4.50." A sigh of relief got to the young man's lips, but was stifled there. The ten-dollar bill was more than enough, but those few minutes (if it was minutes) of shock took the edge off the host's spirits. He doesn't know yet what the itemized account was all about. Probably the hotel wanted to show how much it gave to eat for $1.50.

A Widower He Knew.

Bill Nye. I have often wondered why the poet and the novelist should paint their earnest lovers as youthful. Why not give the carroty widower a show in song and fiction-a "widower" fifty-three years old and sixteen hands high? I knew a widower once of that kind who locked up his shop one day and before teatime had proposed to seven widows, besides stopping an hour to bait his horse by the roadside.

I know this because part of the widows were relatives of mine, and they met at our louse to talk it over and send delegates to the general convention. They decided to go unpledged. He was a self-made man, so far as his teeth were concerned, and drew a small pension. Many is the time I have seen him take out his teeth and rub the rafters of his mouth with arnica, for the plate was made for a much larger man, and when he talked with these teeth in place little children ran screaming to their In my opinion the poem of passion and the romance of delirious rot has seen its best days unless the widower with the padlock whiskers, warranted not to crock, and the tortoise shell neck, and the meteorological Adam's apple that goes
